This project earned a commendation from the Australian Institute of Architects, awarded to me alongside Risham Waraq, recognizing our dedication to innovative and inclusive design.

This project was part of a competition sponsored by the Australian Institute of Architects (AIA), focusing on the development of medium-density dwellings aligned with universal design principles. Owned by Araluen, a non-profit service provider for individuals with disabilities, the project site offered a unique opportunity to explore innovative solutions that addressed both functional needs and aesthetic considerations. The objective was to design dwellings and their surroundings, guided by universal design principles, fostering inclusivity and longevity in living spaces. By integrating thoughtful planning and sustainable design strategies, the project aimed to set a benchmark for future developments catering to inclusivity and accessibility.
